GREEN HAND'S ADVENTURE

Strange Meeting in Honolulu-A Mate Who Served in Sing Sing -- A Fight Aloft.

"I've carried some mighty queer fellows before the mast in my time," said Le deep-water captain as he made aimseif con fortable in an easy chair at a soft dr.nk dispensary along the waer-front yesterday afternoon.

"I don't doubt it for a minute," replied the sk pper in the coasting trade as he sat down beside his friend and alled for two glasses of butter-mirk. Twe shipped some rum specimens myself and I've been to sea for going on hirty years. But don't let me intermpt what you were going to say, cap-

As I was saying," continued the deep-water man, "I've carried some peculiar characters and I can tell you hat I keep a sharp look-out these days of the men I take aboard. It's no pleasant matter, I assure you, when you are going to be five or six months at sea to have a blooming landlubber n the forecastle. Every man counts iboard ship and when one fellow's no recount be kind of demoralizes the rest of the crew. 'Tisn't always the 'lubper's fault that he's no good, he may na, Mant. Cons'deration $700. be smarter'n Jupiter at figuring and lishing up words and all that kind of thing and he may be the son of the mayor of Boston or a clergyman's worse'n that, don't want to learn how to be a sailor, why then deliver me $100. from salling in the same ship with No. 4796—A. Kekanuna et al. to L. I. McCandless; interest in R. P. 4197, kul. him."

"You're right, captain," put in the skipper in the coasting trade, "and that reminds me-" "Well! As I was going to tell you-" went on the deep-water salt, ignoring the interruption. "I can spin you a varn that's true as Gospel, and the fellow's right here in Honolulu who can prove it. I saw him only this morning and passed the time of day with H. M. Kauiho and wife-Kaohiim. He didn't look as if he'd ever in the seen to sea in his life and he shook in the seen to sea in his life and he shook in the seen to sea in his life and he shook in the seen to sea in his life and he shook in the seen to sea in his life and he shook in the second him. He didn't look as if he'd ever as polite and kindly like as if I'd never cussed and swore at him aboard ship in my life. I never was more surprised Est. B. P. Bishop-Waterhouse Inin my days than when I saw the young chap in Honolulu, 'Why! Hello captain!' says he, 'Guess you don't recognize me as the young fellow who shipped with you out of New York several years ago?' But I did, by thunder, and I recollected his name, too.

That fellow came aboard my ship n New York as a green hand. He was DIAMOND HEAD SIGNAL STATION, all dressed up when he asked me for a chance to work his way to Australia. laughed in his face and called him a dude. He got mad and said he'd show me whether or not he could work and he went forward, pulled off his dude's duds and borrowed a jumper and a pair of dungarees from one of the sallors. Then he turned to and worked with the next man getting up sails out of the sail-locker.

> "Well! I took him. We were bound for Rio de Janeiro with a general cargo. My green hand had a chance to prove himself the second night out of Long Island Sound when we ran into a julcy gale. I saw he wasn't afraid of work so I thought I'd give him a better chance and I put him to painting the cabin and doing fancy work. He was all right on the fancy racket but I must say he took his own time. In fact it took him from New York to Rio de Janeiro to paint and decorate the

"When we put in at Rlo at the end of seven or eight weeks, we anchored out in the stream so as not to let the men ashore, and unloaded in lighters. I made my green-hand the night watchman, gave him a gun and told him to keep the crew aboard if he valued my good will. He did it for six weeks and had several lively scraps with the men and with crimps who used to come alongside and try to steal my crew. He shot the fingers off the over the side one night and another time he let the blooming anchor down with a rush on their boat and smashed it all to splinters-we only had one mudhook in the stream at the time. "He was in tight places sometimes, but he held the crew until one night a Russian-Finn got away, by cutting loose a fender and floating ashore, as I found out afterwards, but I was as mad as a pirate at the time and believed my green hand had gone back on me, and I told him so. I also told him

I'd get even for his trickery.
"Next day he tried to get ashore in one of the lighters, but fell through an open hatchway between decks as he was looking below for a bundle he had hid away. He bruised himself up terribly, though he broke no bones. I was ashore at the time and found him in his bunk all bandaged up when I returned aboard. I went to his bunk. really believed him to be shamming. grabbed him by his leg to yank him out of his bunk. It seemed that I got hold of the bruised and battered limb. It must have hurt him, for he kicked me in the jaw with his well leg and knocked me over. That made me madder with him than ever. "On the voyage from Rio de Janeiro to Newcastle-we went in ballast-I put my green hand on the lookout. We had pretty rough weather and ran among cebergs several hundred miles south of the Cape of Good Hope. I guess he didn't find it very comfortable forward on the forecastle head on the lookout

"The Russian-Finn-we recovered

Manila from Newcastle and from Marila we went to Hongkong, thence back to New York.

'Now, arrer all this time, it is strang that I should run up against my green hand in Honolulu. It seems that he speat about a year in Australia doing one thing or another, that he worked his way to Honolulu and became infatuated with this country, settled down and got married and is doing well.

"I tell you what, he's a hustler and no mistake, and he never showed the least bit of unkindly feeling towards me when we met. Many's the time I've felt like chucking him overboard, and here he comes up to me in a boiled shirt and cuffs and all manner of style, hands me a choice Havana and 'Hello, Captain, don't you know me?' Strange what characters a fellow runs up against, isn't it?" "Very strange," said the skipper in the coasting trade, and ca'led for two more glasses of buttermilk.
